

Policy on research publications

ARC Industrial Transformation Training Centre for Uniquely Australian Foods

In preparing research publications on Australian native plants, researchers with the ARC Industrial Transformation Training Centre for Uniquely Australian Foods will ensure that:

- Research results are widely disseminated in journal articles, books, and reports.
- Research results and publications are translated into a format that ensures that they are shared as widely as possible.
- Indigenous knowledge is not included in project publications without the prior informed consent of the custodians of the knowledge.
- Whenever Indigenous knowledge is used in, informs, or inspires research that leads to publication, Indigenous partners are given the opportunity to be named as a co-author of the resulting project publications.
- Where an Indigenous partner is not named as co-author of a project publication, the Indigenous partner's contribution are recognised and/or acknowledged in project publications, unless they wish otherwise.
- Specific geographical details about the location where plant materials were obtained are not disclosed, without the prior approval of the Indigenous partners.
- Quotes from Indigenous people are not included in project publications unless the relevant Indigenous partners give prior informed consent to do so.
- Photographs of Indigenous people and photographs taken on Indigenous land are not included in project publications unless the relevant Indigenous partners give prior informed consent to do so.
